

CHANGES REQUESTED BY THE TORONTO POLICE ASSOCIATION AND THE SWEET FAMILY

1. That the federal Privacy Act be amended to exclude the institutional records of violent offenders who are seeking any form of release.
2. In the meantime, that the Government of Canada support the Access to Information Act application brought by the Sweet family and the Toronto Police Association wherein the public will have full access to Craig Munro's institutional records with the Correctional Service of Canada and the National Parole Board.
3. That the Corrections and Conditional Release Act be amended, putting an end to annual parole hearings for violent offenders whose initial parole requests have been denied. For those serving life sentences, they ought not to be allowed to re-apply for parole until five years thereafter unless through a proper screening process, with clear and unambiguous guidelines, can establish a material change in circumstances, thereby allowing for a new parole hearing after two years.
4. That the Corrections and Conditional Release Act be amended, similar to section 722(2.1) of the Criminal Code, giving victims the option of having a person of their choice read their victim impact statement.
